The first book published in English by William Caxton was his own translation of The Recuyell of the Histories of Troy, an account of the Trojan legend. View images from this item (1). Usage terms Public Domain. Caxton brings printing to England. In around 1476 Caxton returned to England and set up the first printing shop in the country near Westminster Cathedral. From here he issued over a hundred books between 1476 and 1492, the year of his death. The size of his organisation is unclear. He writes mainly about late medieval English manuscripts and early printed books. The text in this article is available under the Creative Commons License. See Also. Writing (books, films, plays, CDs) reviews. Reviews are brief accounts of books, films, plays, CDs, etc. Their purpose is to inform readers and viewers, while also giving opinions and recommendations about whether or not they should buy a CD, read a book, watch a film, etc. Reviews should include: - an introduction which gives facts and background information concerning the book, CD, etc. (i.e. the title, the name of the artist/author, type, etc). - a main body, usually is made of two paragraphs: one describing the main features of the subject (e.g. the plot), and another including general com Recent progress on the study topic which can be organized thematically or chronologically. Ideally, separate themes should be discussed in a chronological manner to describe how research in the field has evolved over time and to highlight the progress in the field. The review should include a comparison and contrast of different studies. Discussing the controversial aspects helps to identify the main gaps that need to be worked upon. This is essential for defining the problem statement of the study and highlighting the significance of the research under question. Once a problem statement has b Nota bene is a Latin phrase which first appeared in English writing c. 1711. Often abbreviated as NB, n.b., or with the ligature , the phrase is Latin for "note well." In Modern English, it is used, particularly in legal papers, to draw the attention of the reader to a certain (side) aspect or detail of the subject being addressed. While NB is also often used in academic writing, note is a common substitute. Manuscript Studies brings together scholarship from around the world and across disciplines related to the study of premodern manuscript books and documents, with a special emphasis on the role of digital technologies in advancing manuscript research.
