This book is a good warning for how things are going to go if we don't step in and try to put marriage and family back together as it should be. Kids are not as resilient as people might think. As a teacher, I've seen the effects of traditional marriage disintegrating firsthand. Kids need stability in a two parent (one of each gender) home. I know that is not a popular view anymore, but the kids that seem to do best in school are the ones that come from a two parent, mom and dad home. The ones least successful have either a single parent, divorced parents (where they are shuttled back and forth) or the loss of a parent.

For the past forty years... to Read. Want to Read Want to Read. Marriage Under Fire: Why We Must Win This War is a book by Evangelical Christian leader James Dobson, published in 2004 by Multnomah Publishers. The book examines the same-sex marriage movement from an opponent's point of view. Dobson discusses the history of the movement, gives arguments against its influence, advocates the Federal Marriage Amendment, criticizes what he views as judicial activism, and exhorts opponents to mobilize.
