In her kitchen, she holds night in a box. Inside, the moon drifts and catches on shred of clouds. The clouds catch and slip through trees. In their bed, sleepers do not count the hours she holds them on her lap. At four, wind. At five, moon sets in hills. Sleepers scurry into cupboards. In one corner, insomniacs wrap string, sweep up clipped moans, sighs. Her helpers, they tidy streets under shaggy pines, record the hours of slate. A stray care cruises one street, then another. Stops. In the Insomniac performer family, we get to travel together, and I see a lot of the relationships turn into lifelong friendships. You see that the bond is really strong. It’s not just a job; it’s a lifestyle. You’ll see pros helping novice dancers. I love walking around and feeling that kind of energy and community happening between strangers. Like, the old schoolers watching the new people come in and helping them and giving them pointers and working on choreo with them.
